Argument/Informative Writing

The Importance of Transitions

In both academic writing and professional writing, your goal is to convey information clearly and concisely, if not to convert the reader to your way of thinking.

Transitions help you to achieve these goals by establishing logical connections between sentences, paragraphs, and sections of your papers.

In other words, transitions tell readers what to do with the information you present to them.

Types of Transitions

A transition can be a single word, a phrase, a sentence, or more. In each case, it functions the same way: First, the transition either directly summarizes the content of a preceding sentence or paragraph. Then, it helps the reader anticipate or comprehend the new information that you wish to present.

Transitions between paragraphs: If you have done a good job of arranging paragraphs so that the content of one leads logically to the next, the transition will highlight a relationship that already exists by summarizing the previous paragraph and suggesting something of the content of the paragraph that follows. A transition between paragraphs can be a word or two (however, for example, similarly), a phrase, or a sentence.

Transitions within paragraphs: As with transitions between sections and paragraphs, transitions within paragraphs act as cues by helping readers to anticipate what is coming before they read it. Within paragraphs, transitions tend to be single words or short phrases.
